Theodore Rodilitz was born in Brooklyn in 1919 and Doris Zaslow in Philadelphia in 1926. All four of their grandparents' families were Jews from the western edge of the Russian Empire: the Rodilitzes and Hausmans from around Kobrin and Brest in Grodno province, with roots in Kovel in Volhynia, and the Zaslows and Saslows from Tulchin and Obodovka in Podolia. They crossed between 1892 and 1925. These notes set out what the records, gathered in October and November 2026, show about who they were, where they came from, and how each of them reached America.

How the four families connect

Theodore Rodilitz and Doris Zaslow took out their marriage licence in Brooklyn on 7 September 1948. He was the son of Morris Rodilitz and Sylvia Hausman of Brooklyn; she was the daughter of Benjamin Zaslow and Catherine Saslow of Philadelphia. Behind them stand four immigrant families, two on each side.

On Theodore's side, the Rodilitzes came from the Kobrin and Brest district of Grodno province, now in Belarus, with roots in Kovel in Volhynia, now in Ukraine. Jacob Rodilitz, a Hebrew teacher and the son of Yonah, went to America first, in 1907; his wife Mary, daughter of Abraham Prozansky, and their eight children followed over the next six years. The Hausmans, Sylvia's family, were probably from Brest-Litovsk. Sylvia gave 1910 as the year she came, and her widowed mother, Rose, very probably followed in 1925, by way of Havana.

On Doris's side, both families came from southern Podolia, now in Vinnytsia province, Ukraine. The Saslows, her mother's family, came from Tulchin, where Benjamin Saslow was born Ber Zaslaver in 1863, the son of David and Khasya; the family was registered as townspeople of Soroki, across the Dniester in Bessarabia, and as colonists of a Jewish farming colony near it. Benjamin Saslow, a paperhanger, reached America in 1892, and his wife and two small daughters followed in 1893. The Zaslows, her father's family, came from Obodovka, about 42 km from Tulchin. Benjamin Zaslow probably arrived in Philadelphia in March 1904 with two of his brothers, and his parents followed to Brooklyn in 1906.

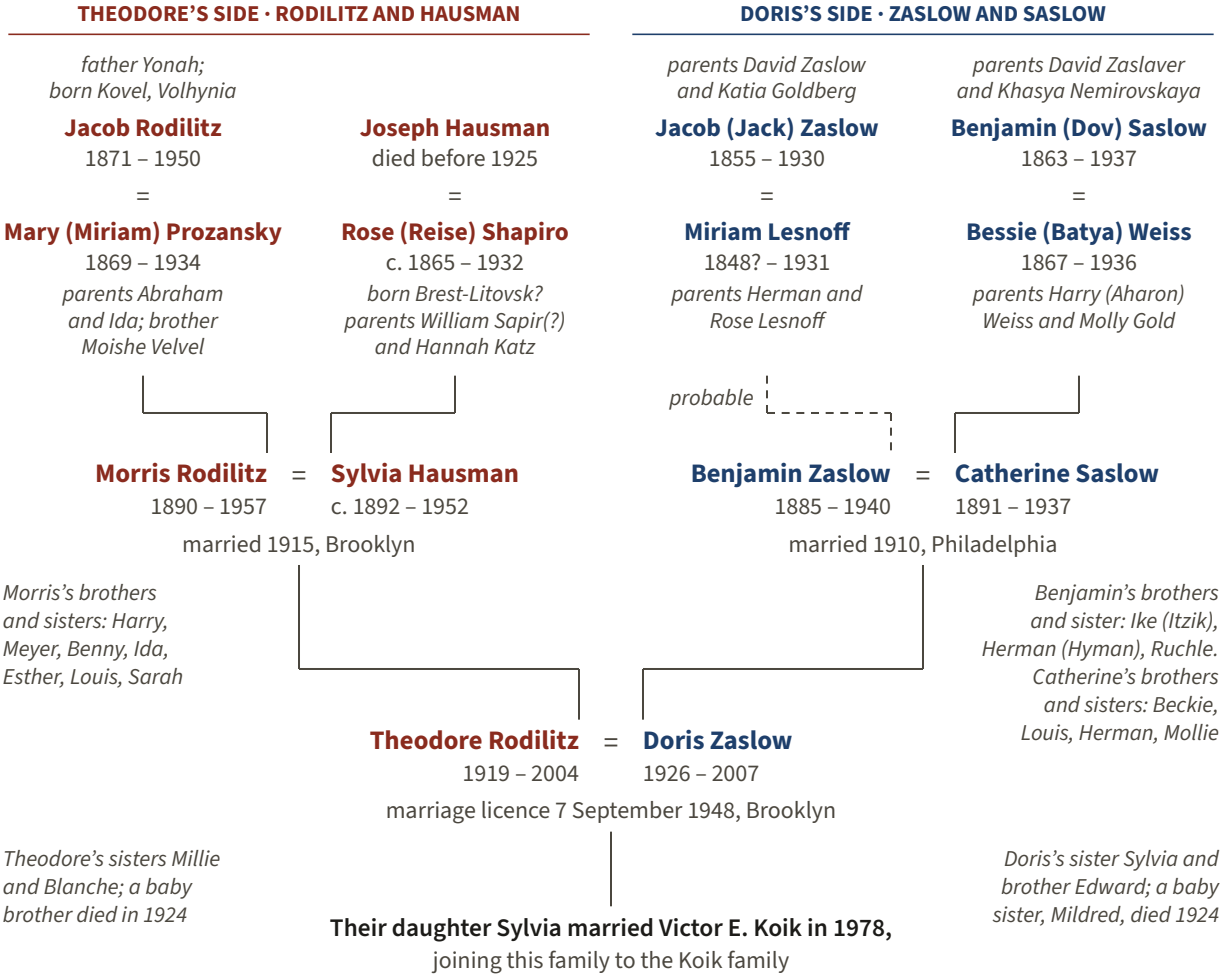

Spellings, names and dates

The family name appears as Rodilitz, Rodlitz, Rodolitz, Rodeletz, Rodelets, Rodelec and Rudales; Rodilitz is the form Theodore used and is used here. Zaslow appears as Zaslawer, Soslawer, Saslawer, Zaslof and Zosloff, and Saslow as Saslaw, Zaslaw and Sarlow.

Everyone in these families had a Yiddish or Hebrew name as well as the English one they used in America. The records show many of them: Morris was Motel, Harry Hersch, Meyer Meier, Benny Berl, Ida Chaje, Louis Leib, Sarah Sure; Bessie Saslow was Basche (Hebrew Batya) and Catherine was Beile; Benjamin Zaslow's Hebrew name was Dov Ber. Jacob Rodilitz was Yaakov and Mary was Miriam Reizel. These names are often the key to matching a European record with an American one.

Russia used the Julian (Old Style) calendar until 1918; it was 12 days behind the modern calendar in the 1800s and 13 days behind from 1900. Hebrew dates on gravestones follow the Jewish calendar. American records use the modern calendar.

Theodore Rodilitz and Doris Zaslow, their parents and grandparents. Red names: Theodore's side; blue: Doris's side. The dashed line marks a probable link: Benjamin Zaslow's parents are identified with about 80–85% confidence (part five). Dates followed by "?" are not yet confirmed from a record.

Names that look alike. Zaslow and Saslow are different families: Doris's father was Benjamin Zaslow and her mother was Catherine Saslow, daughter of another Benjamin, Benjamin Saslow. The names were spelled interchangeably by clerks, so each record has to be read with care. There are also three Sylvias: Theodore's mother, Sylvia Hausman; Doris's elder sister, Sylvia Zaslow (born 1911); and Theodore and Doris's own daughter.

Part one

Every branch of this family came from the Pale of Settlement, the band of western provinces of the Russian Empire, from the Baltic to the Black Sea, where most Jews were required by law to live. In 1897 the Russian census counted about 4.9 million Jews in the Pale. They were about one in nine of its people, but most of them lived in towns and market towns (shtetlekh), where they were often the majority, and almost all of them spoke Yiddish.[1]

Grodno province, the Rodilitzes' home, lay in the north of the Pale. In 1897 its Kobrin district had 23,080 Jews and Brest district 45,902, and in the town of Kobrin itself Jews were about 69% of the population. Podolia, home of the Saslows and Zaslows, lay in the south. Tulchin had 10,055 Jews, 62% of the town; Obodovka, where Benjamin Zaslow was born, was much smaller, with about 1,675 Jews, a fifth of its people.[2]

The law hemmed these communities in. After the pogroms of 1881–82, the government's "Temporary Rules" of May 1882, known as the May Laws, barred Jews from settling anew in the countryside. In Kobrin a decree of the same year also stopped Jews from leasing farms and rural buildings. In 1897 the state took over the liquor trade, which had supported many Jewish families, and Kobrin's local history dates the start of heavy emigration, "especially to America," to that year. Brest burned in two great fires, in 1895 and 1901, and a Brest memorial book records "a great exodus from the city" after the second.[3]

Jacob Rodilitz was a Hebrew teacher (melamed), one of the commonest and worst-paid occupations in this world. A teacher usually ran a heder, a one-room religious school for small boys, often in his own home, and his family often needed other work to make ends meet.[4]

Identifications of Czerniany (medium-high confidence) and Maciejów (low to medium) are explained in parts two and three. "Grodno," given as a birthplace on several American records, probably means the province rather than the city.

Why they left, and when

No record found so far gives any of these emigrants' own reasons for leaving, so what follows is general history, set against the dates on which each of them left. Historians used to explain the great Jewish emigration chiefly by pogroms. More recent work, especially by Gur Alroey, gives more weight to poverty, to letters from relatives already abroad, and to the spread of information about the journey.[5]

The Saslows left in 1892–93. In 1891 about 30,000 Jews were expelled from Moscow into the already crowded Pale, and in 1892 cholera spread across the empire and reached Hamburg. Jewish immigration from Russia to the United States reached 76,417 in 1892, the highest figure before 1900.[6]

Benjamin Zaslow left in March 1904, aged 19, just after Japan attacked Port Arthur and the Russo-Japanese War began. Young men were called up in the year they turned 21, so his own call-up would have come in 1906; the wartime pressure of 1904–05 fell first on reservists, men who had already served. Jewish immigration from Russia rose from 47,689 in 1903 to 77,544 in 1904.[7] Whether the war or the draft had anything to do with his leaving is unknown.

The Rodilitzes left between 1907 and 1913, when emigration had become routine, carried by letters home and tickets bought in America and sent back to Europe. No pogrom has been found in Kobrin between 1881 and 1914, nor in Tulchin or Obodovka in 1903–06. Brest saw violence in 1905, and Białystok, in the same province, a pogrom in 1906 in which about 80 Jews were killed. Tulchin and Obodovka suffered their worst pogroms later, in 1919.[8]

The journey

To leave legally, a Russian subject needed a foreign passport, which was slow and costly to obtain. Perhaps three quarters of Jewish emigrants crossed the border without one, with the help of agents and smugglers. From 1893–94 the German shipping lines ran control stations along the Prussian border, where emigrants bound for Hamburg and Bremen were bathed, examined for disease, and checked for money and a ticket. Alroey puts the full cost of getting one adult from the Pale to America at about 165–215 roubles, at a time when a working family earned perhaps 500–600 roubles a year. That is why families so often went one or two at a time.[9]

The family used every main route. Morris sailed from Bremen; Harry, and later Mary with the youngest children, from Hamburg; Jacob, Meyer and Benny with the Holland-America Line from Rotterdam. The Saslows went the “indirect” way, from Hamburg to Britain and on from Glasgow, and the Zaslows from Liverpool. Steerage passengers landing at New York went through Ellis Island, opened in 1892, where officers checked them against the ship’s list and could hold anyone “likely to become a public charge.” Philadelphia’s arrivals landed at the Washington Avenue station on Pier 53.[10]

Part two

The Rodilitzes of Kobrin district

Jacob and Mary

Jacob Rodilitz (Yiddish Jankel; in his own papers Rodeletz) was born on 15 March 1871 in Kovel, Volhynia. When he applied to become an American citizen he described himself as a Hebrew teacher.[11] His wife Mary, called Miriam and Mariam in the records, was born on 25 December 1869. Her maiden name is written Prozansky, Pruzansky and Porojinsky, and her parents were Abraham and Ida; the 1913 passenger list gives her birthplace as Kobryn.[12] Their gravestone gives the next generation back: Jacob was Yaakov son of Yonah, and Mary was Miriam Reizel daughter of Avraham.[13]

Jacob's 1927 naturalization petition names their eight children with their dates of birth. Their birthplaces come from their own later records:

Child	Yiddish name	Born	Birthplace as recorded
Morris	Motel	17 April 1890	Czerniany; "Grodno"
Harry	Hersch	20 August 1892	Maczew
Meyer	Meier	5 March 1894	Kobrin
Benny (Benjamin)	Berl	28 April 1896	Kobrin
Ida	Chaje	19 January 1898	"Grodno"; Kobryn
Esther	Ester	4 March 1900	Brest; Kobryn
Louis	Leib	14 August 1905	"Grodno"; Kobryn
Sarah	Sure	6 February 1907	Kobrin

Some of these dates disagree with ages on other records: Esther's age on her 1913 passenger list points to about 1903, and Ida's and Esther's marriage certificates make them younger than the petition does.

The family seems to have lived in or moved between two areas about 80–115 km apart. Jacob in 1907 and Harry in 1910 gave their home as Maczew or Maciow, probably Maciejów (now Lukiv), a small town 27 km west of Kovel. Everyone else gave places in the Kobrin–Brest area of Grodno province: Czerniany, Kobrin, Brest and Divin. Divin stands on the road from Kobrin to Kovel, roughly between the two areas (map 1a).

Mary's other names. Two sons' passenger lists give their mother as Resel (Harry, 1910) and R. (Meyer, 1911), and Ida's and Esther's marriage certificates give her maiden name as Rosen. Her gravestone explains the first two: her full name was Miriam Reizel, and Reizel (Rose) was the name the family used, for the plot her children later bought is named for "Jacob & Miriam Rose." Rosen on the marriage certificates is probably a clerk's mishearing of the same name.

One at a time: the crossings, 1907–1913

Jacob went first. The Holland-America Line's register of passage money records "Jankel Rudoles" sailing from Rotterdam on the Rijndam on 27 April 1907, and the ship reached New York on 7 May; Jacob later swore that he arrived on 9 May 1907 on the Ryndam. The Ellis Island list for that voyage has a "Jankel Rudales," 33, married, from Mariow or Maciow, whose passage was paid by his brother-in-law, going to that brother-in-law, "B. Rozankrans," at 70 Orchard Street on Manhattan's Lower East Side. The ship, the date and his home town fit Jacob; his age (33 rather than 36), his occupation ("miller," perhaps a misreading of melamed) and his height do not, so this line is probably, but not certainly, his (about 70%). B. Rozankrans has not been identified: he was not living at 70 Orchard Street in 1905 or 1910.[14]

The sons followed, one by one, each going to their father in Brooklyn:

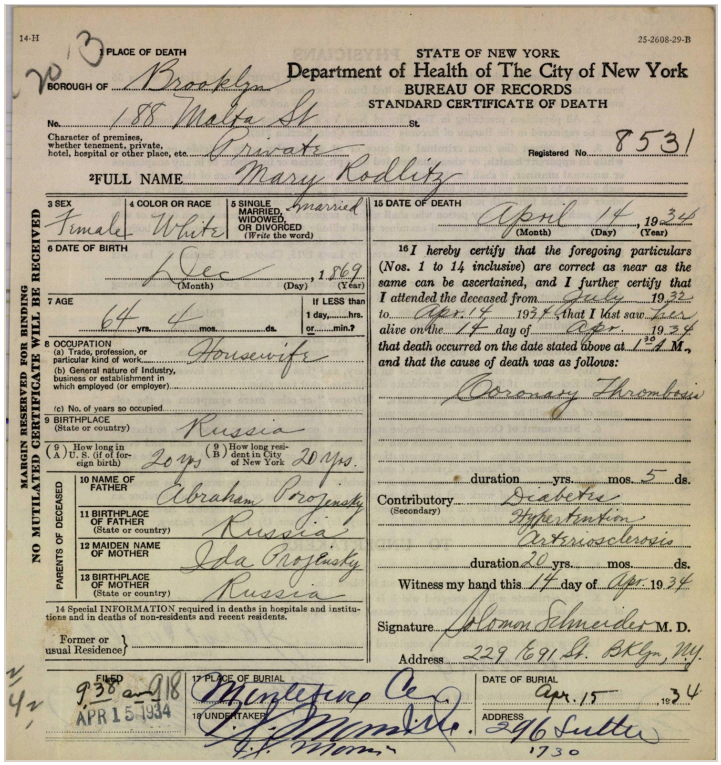

Who	Ship and port	Arrived	Details from the passenger list
Morris (Motel), 18	Breslau, from Bremen	16 December 1907	From Czerniany; mother Mariem there; passage paid by his father; $2; to father Jankel, 326 Snediker Ave
Harry (Hersch), 18	Cleveland, from Hamburg	12 June 1910	Locksmith, from Maczew; mother "Resel"; to his father at 326 Snediker Ave
Meyer (Meier), 18	Rotterdam, from Rotterdam (sailed 22 July)	31 July 1911	From Kobrin; passage paid by his father; to father at 721 Vienna Ave
Benny (Berl), 17	Potsdam, from Rotterdam (sailed 22 June)	2–3 July 1912	From Kobrin; mother Marya; passage paid by his father; held as a possible public charge ("underdeveloped for 17"); admitted 5 July
Mary, 47, with Chaje (Ida) 16, Ester 10, Leib (Louis) 9 and Sure (Sarah) 7	Pretoria, from Hamburg	22 December 1913	From Dwin (Divin); all born Kobryn; an uncle, Joel M., left behind in Dwin; to her husband at 721 Vienna Ave

The Holland-America registers show that Jacob's, Meyer's and Benny's tickets were all booked through the line's own office in New York and entered as prepaid, and Meyer's and Benny's passenger lists say their passage was paid by their father. So Jacob bought his sons' tickets in America and sent them to Europe. His own ticket, too, was bought in New York, apparently by the brother-in-law he went to join.[15] Mary stayed in Europe with the four youngest for six and a half years, a long separation but not an unusual one; by 1913 they were living in Divin. She arrived eight months before the First World War closed the routes.

Brooklyn

The family settled in East New York, Brooklyn, beside Brownsville, where garment work and new transit lines had drawn tens of thousands of Jewish families out of the Lower East Side. Their addresses follow the family's growth: 326 Snediker Avenue (1907–10), 721 Vienna Avenue (1911–13), 115 Malta Street (1915), and from about 1919 188 Malta Street, which stayed the family home into the 1930s. In June 1915, eighteen months after Mary's arrival, the New York state census found all ten together at 115 Malta Street.[16]

Six of the other children's marriages have been found, and all six gave 188 Malta Street as their home: Harry married Fannie Bunder in 1919, Ida married Irving Hovelin and Esther Sol Feinberg in 1927, Sarah married Martin Gordon in 1929, Meyer married Henrietta Frankel in 1932, and Louis married Gertrude Kaplan in 1934. Every wedding but Meyer's was held at, or by the rabbi of, the synagogue at 41 Malta Street, where Morris had married in 1915. Meyer was in Europe at the end of the First World War; he returned to New York in November 1919, giving his father at 188 Malta Street as his nearest relative.[17]

Mary Rodlitz's death certificate, Brooklyn, 14 April 1934. It names her parents as Abraham Porojinsky and Ida Projinsky, and records twenty years in the United States. NYC Municipal Archives, D-K-1934-0008531.

Jacob declared his intention to become a citizen in 1924 and was naturalized in February 1929. Mary died at 188 Malta Street on 14 April 1934, aged 64, and was buried the next day at Montefiore Cemetery in Queens. Her death certificate gives her parents as Abraham Porojinsky and Ida Projinsky and her time in America as twenty years.[12] Jacob died on 14 or 15 June 1950, aged 79 by his papers (82 on his stone), and was buried beside her, in the plot of the Agudath Achim Anshe New Lots congregation, a local synagogue of East New York.[18]

Yonah and Avraham

The Hebrew inscriptions on Jacob and Mary's shared stone, headed RODELETZ and "Beloved Mother and Father," are the oldest family names yet found on this side:

Stone	Hebrew inscription	Translation	Died
Jacob	יעקב בן ר' יונה	Yaakov son of R. Yonah	1st day of Rosh Chodesh Tammuz 5710 (15 June 1950)
Mary	מרים רייזל בת ר' אברהם	Miriam Reizel daughter of R. Avraham	29 Nisan 5694 (14 April 1934)

So Jacob's father was Yonah (Jonah), and Mary's father Abraham, named on her death certificate, is confirmed. A grandson confirms both. Harry's first son, born on 21 May 1920, was Abraham Jonas Rodolitz; his own stone reads Avraham Yonah son of R. Tzvi Hersh. He was named after both of Harry's grandfathers. Ashkenazi Jews name children only after relatives who have died, so both Abraham Prozansky and Yonah Rodilitz had probably died, in Europe, by 1920.[19]

Mary's brother, Moishe Velvel

In August 1909 an 18-year-old shoemaker named Moische Wolf Prozanski landed at Ellis Island from Antwerp on the Kroonland. He came from "Du…," almost certainly Divin, and the relative he left behind was his "sister Marina Rodelitz," of Divin. This is Mary, four years before she left, and it confirms both her maiden name and her home in Divin.[20]

He settled in Chicago, where he used the name Morris William Rosen. He enlisted in the US Army at Jefferson Barracks, Missouri, in October 1915, served in the Quartermaster Corps until a medical discharge in April 1918, and was naturalized in Chicago in December 1921 as "Moishe Velval (Morris William) Prozansky (Rosen)," born 5 March 1892. In 1928 he entered the veterans' home at Sawtelle, Los Angeles; asked for his nearest relative, he gave "Sister, Mary Rodeletz, address unknown, New York." He stayed in Los Angeles, working in the clothing trade, and probably died there in March 1982, aged 89; he is buried at Young Israel Cemetery, Norwalk, under a stone reading "Morris W. Rosen 1892–1982." No wife or children have been found.[20]

Moishe Velvel was 22 years younger than Mary. He may have been a late child of Abraham and Ida, or a half-brother from a second marriage of Abraham's; the records do not yet say. His veteran's file, which the Department of Veterans Affairs still holds, should name his parents.

Part three

Morris, Sylvia and the Hausmans

Morris

Morris Rodilitz, the eldest son, was born Motel on 17 April 1890. He was the second of the family to cross, landing at Ellis Island from the Breslau on 16 December 1907, seven months after his father. The list describes an 18-year-old who could read and write, from Czerniany in Grodno province, where his mother still lived; his father had paid his passage, and he arrived with $2.[21]

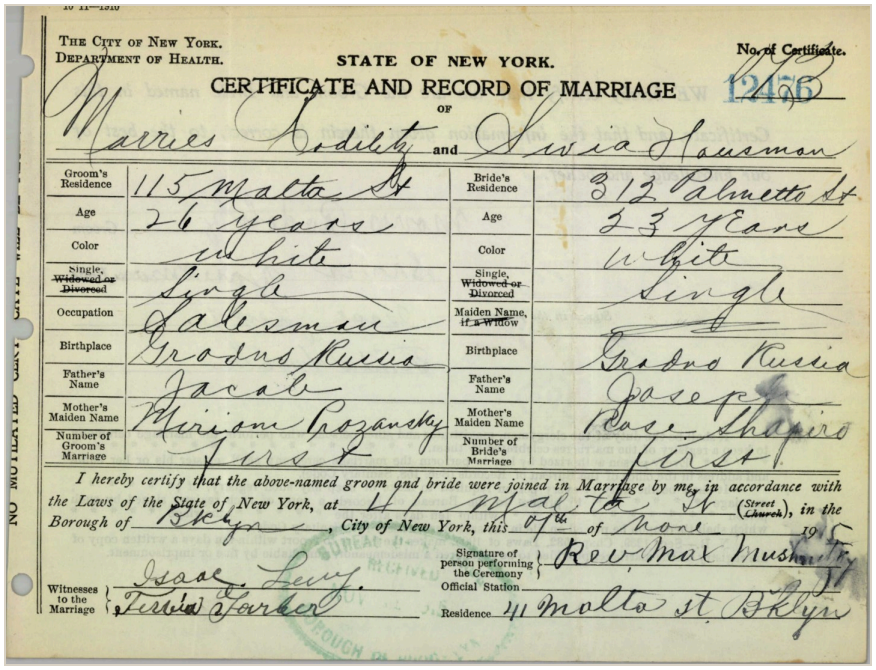

Czerniany is probably the village of Chernyany (Charniany), now in Malaryta district of Belarus's Brest region. Before 1914 it was in Brest district of Grodno province, about 27 km south-south-west of Kobrin and 35 km from Brest. It was a village with a handful of Jewish families, about a hundred people before 1941, not a market town.[22]

Morris declared his intention to become a citizen on 15 November 1913, the same day as his brother Harry, and was naturalized in Brooklyn in 1921. Both brothers gave their birthplace only as "Grodno, Russia"; their certificates of arrival confirm the 1907 and 1910 passenger lists. He worked as a salesman in 1915, in the "novelty" trade in 1930, and as a stock clerk in 1940.[23]

Morris and Sylvia

On 7 November 1915 Morris married Sivia (Sylvia) Hausman at 41 Malta Street, on the same street as his family's home at 115 Malta Street. She was 23, living at 312 Palmetto Street, and, like Morris, gave her birthplace as Grodno, Russia. Her parents were Joseph Hausman and Rose Shapiro.[24]

Sylvia later gave 1910 as the year she came to America. Her crossing has not been found, despite searches under many spellings; she may have travelled under a different name, or, like her mother and sister later, by way of Cuba.[25]

Certificate and record of marriage, Brooklyn, 7 November 1915. Morris Rodilitz, 26, salesman, born Grodno, son of Jacob and Miriam Prozansky, married Sivia Hausman, 23, born Grodno, daughter of Joseph and Rose Shapiro, at 41 Malta Street. Witnesses Isaac Levy and Fevia(?) Farber. NYC Municipal Archives, M-K-1915-0012476.

Morris and Sylvia's first years were spent with his family: in 1920 they and their two children were a second household at 188 Malta Street. By 1925 they had their own home at 537 Georgia Avenue, where they were still living in 1940. They had four children:

- Millie (Mildred), born about 1917;
- Theodore, born on 25 April 1919 in Brooklyn;
- a son, born on 6 August 1924, who lived four days and was buried at Mount Lebanon Cemetery;
- Blanche, born about 1927.[26]

Sylvia died on 14 December 1952, and Morris on 6 January 1957, aged 66. They are buried at New Montefiore Cemetery, West Babylon, Long Island, in a family plot that Jacob and Mary's children named for their parents: the "Jacob & Miriam Rose Rodolitz" family circle. Morris's brothers Meyer (1950), Harry (1967) and Louis (1970) lie there too.[27]

Rose Hausman, by way of Havana

Sylvia's mother was very probably the Rose (Reise, Rejza) Hausman who came to New York on 12 May 1925 aboard the Ebro from Havana; her name, age, widowhood and timing all fit. The list calls her a widow of 60, born at Brassc, which is probably Brześć, the Polish name for Brest-Litovsk. She left a daughter, Fega, in Havana, at San Ignacio 57, and was going to another daughter, G. Weisberg, at 636 East 135th Street in the Bronx. Officers held her for two days as "likely to become a public charge," a rule used especially against elderly widows. Three weeks later the state census found her in Morris and Sylvia's home at 537 Georgia Avenue.[28]

Rose's route was typical of its time. The quota laws of 1921 and 1924 sharply limited immigration from eastern Europe, and Cuba became a waystation for Jews hoping to reach the United States. How Rose qualified to enter is a question for her immigration file. Her husband Joseph Hausman had died before 1925, probably in Europe or Cuba. Rose died in the Bronx on 15 November 1932, aged 67; her death certificate names her parents as William Sapir(?) and Hannah Katz, Sapir being a form of Shapiro.[28]

Theodore

Theodore Rodilitz was born in Brooklyn on 25 April 1919 and grew up at 537 Georgia Avenue. In 1940 he was single, living with his parents and working as an assistant manager. When he registered for the draft that autumn, aged 21, he worked for the Comet Manufacturing Company at 656 Broadway, Manhattan, and named his mother, Mrs. Sylvia Rodilitz, as the person who would always know his address.[29] He enlisted in the Army in April 1941 and was a soldier when, in September 1943, he married for the first time, at the Twin Cantors Temple on Eastern Parkway; that marriage was annulled in December 1946.[30]

Part four

The Saslows of Podolia

Benjamin and Bessie

Doris Zaslow's mother, Catherine, was the daughter of Benjamin Saslow, whose Hebrew name, on his gravestone, was Dov son of David. He was born Ber Zaslaver in Tulchin on 20 March 1863 (in America he gave June 1865) and reached America in 1892, the year he always gave to census takers; his ship has not been found. He was a paperhanger. In 1900 he could read, write and speak English, but when he was naturalized on 15 December 1902 he signed his petition with his mark.[31]

His wife, Bessie (Basche; Hebrew Batya), was born in March 1867. Her parents were Harry (Hebrew Aharon) Weiss and Molly Gold. In 1900 she could not yet read, write or speak English; the next year's city directory lists her as a grocer, at the same address as her husband.[32]

The crossing of 1893

Bessie followed her husband a year later with their two small daughters. A Hamburg emigration list records Basche Zaslaw, 26, with Jety, 3, and Beile, 1, leaving Hamburg on 16 June 1893, from "Podolsk" and bound for Philadelphia. They crossed from Glasgow on the Anchor Line's Circassia and landed at Ellis Island on 3 July 1893.[33]

The Circassia list, 3 July 1893 (detail). "Basche Zaslaw, 26, wife," from "Padolsk," bound for Philadelphia, with Leib, 30, printer, Jety, 2, and Beile, 1. Statue of Liberty–Ellis Island Foundation; NARA M237. The whole page is on the cover.

The match is strong, about 90%. Catherine's Hebrew name on her gravestone is Beila, and her mother's is Batya, matching Beile and Basche; Beckie's and Catherine's birth dates in the 1900 census, December 1889 and April 1891, fit Jety's and Beile's ages. The man travelling with them, Leib Zaslaw, 30, a printer who could read and write, was probably not Bessie's husband, who was Dov, a paperhanger who signed with a mark, and who named a son Leib in 1895, which Jewish custom avoided for a living father. Leib was probably a relative escorting the family.[33]

The route is unusual and has a likely explanation. That same month, June 1893, Hamburg banned Russian steerage passengers from embarking because of fears of cholera, and many emigrants went instead by the "indirect" route across the North Sea to Britain and on to America from Liverpool or Glasgow. The records do not say why the family went by Glasgow; the ban is a reasonable inference.[34]

Philadelphia

The Saslows lived in South Philadelphia, the city's main Jewish quarter: at 787 South Third Street in 1900, at 1924 South Fifth Street in 1910, and by 1920 in their own house at 2208 South Fifth Street. Benjamin had his own paperhanging business. Five children lived to adulthood:

- Beckie (Jety), born in December 1889 in Russia, who married David Mitchell and died on 26 August 1914, aged 25;
- Catherine (Beile, Katie), born in April 1891 in Russia: Doris's mother;
- Louis, born in Philadelphia in 1893 or 1895;
- Herman, born in November 1896;
- Mollie, born in April 1899.[35]

Bessie died on 8 May 1936 at her daughter Catherine's house, 2163 East Cambria Street, and Benjamin on 19 July 1937, aged 72 (his gravestone says 73). They are buried at Har Jehuda Cemetery in Upper Darby, outside Philadelphia. Benjamin lies in section D in the plot of a Tulchiner society, a burial society of people from Tulchin, and Catherine, who died seven weeks after him, in the next grave.[36]

Why Tulchin. The burial plot was the first clue: Jewish immigrants were usually buried with their landslayt, people from the same town, in plots bought by a society named for it (a landsmanshaft). The society that owns the plot was probably Philadelphia's Tulchiner Beneficial Association, into which two other societies later merged.[37] Tulchin's own records, described below, now point the same way.

Ber, son of David

Tulchin's Jewish registers survive from the 1840s, and they answer the question the burial plot raised. On 14 January 1847 two young people married in Tulchin: Duvid, son of Berko Zaslaver, aged 18, and Khasya Dvoyra Nemirovskaya, aged 17, daughter of Duvid.[38] Over the next quarter-century the registers record their children: Khaya Sima, born in February 1859; Ber, born on 20 March 1863; Bluma, born about 1866; Tsipa, born in January 1869; and Avrum, born in August 1871.[39] Ber's Hebrew name is written Dov, and his father is "David son of Ber Zaslaver."

In 1875 the Russian authorities took a census of the Jews of Podolia, males only. Tulchin's list of Jews registered in other towns includes Duvid Berkovich Zaslava, that is, David son of Berko, aged 46, a townsman of Soroki in Bessarabia, with his sons Berko, 12, and Avrum, 3.[40] A copy of the list went back to Soroki and survives in the National Archives of Moldova, with the same names and ages.[41] Soroki (now Soroca, in Moldova) lies on the Dniester about 70 km south-west of Tulchin. Little Avrum died in Tulchin in March 1880.[42]

Ber grew up and married a Basya. On 26 July 1887 their first son was born in Tulchin and named Aron; he died at two months, on 3 September, of convulsions. His death entry describes the family as "colonists of Dombroveny, Soroki district."[43] Dov son of David, married to Batya daughter of Aharon: this is almost certainly Benjamin and Bessie Saslow, who named their first son, it seems, after Bessie's father, already dead by 1887. The records do not show where their daughters Beckie (1889) and Catherine (1891) were born; it was not in Tulchin.[44]

> The case that Ber Zaslaver was Benjamin Saslow (high, about 90–95%)
> - For: The names: Ber (Hebrew Dov) son of Duvid, against Benjamin's gravestone, Dov son of David.
> - For: The wife: Ber son of Duvid had a wife Basya and a son Aron in 1887; Bessie Saslow was Batya daughter of Aharon, and Basya is the everyday form of Batya.
> - For: The place: Tulchin, the town of Benjamin's burial society, and the family's surname, Zaslaver, against Zaslaw on Bessie's 1893 passenger list.
> - For: The family appears in four independent kinds of record: the 1847 marriage, the births of 1859–71, the 1875 census and the deaths of 1880 and 1887.
> - Against: Benjamin later gave June 1865 as his birth, not March 1863, a common kind of difference; and no single record yet joins the Tulchin Ber to the Philadelphia paperhanger by name.

Bluma, 1888

On 10 August 1888, in Tulchin, Bluma, 22, daughter of Duvid Zaslaver, married Itsko Yankelevich Vaisman (Weissman), 24, a Tulchin townsman and army reservist. The register says she was "from Dobroven."[45] She was Benjamin's sister. Their son Yankel was born in Tulchin in December 1889.[46] Dobroven is Dombroveny (Dumbrăveni), a Jewish farming colony in Soroki district founded in 1836 by Jewish settlers from Podolia; JewishGen's indexes of Bessarabian records show other Zaslaver families there and in Soroki into the 1920s.[41]

Zaslaver means "from Zaslav," the town now called Iziaslav, in Volhynia. The family had lived in Tulchin since at least the 1840s, but its legal registration, as Soroki townspeople and Dombroveny colonists, suggests that an earlier generation had joined the colony across the Dniester, where Jewish farming colonists were given land and, for a time, relief from some taxes and from army service. Benjamin's great-grandfather on this line was Berko Zaslaver, Duvid's father, born about the beginning of the nineteenth century.

Part five

The Zaslows of Obodovka

Benjamin Zaslow's own account

Benjamin Zaslow, Doris's father, was born on 8 January 1885 at "Obodofsky," Russia, by his own account in his naturalization papers. This was Obodovka (Obodivka), a small Jewish market town in Olgopol district, Podolia. In 1921 he swore that he had come from Liverpool on a ship he called the Rappaport, landing at Philadelphia on or about 15 March 1904, and in 1923 that he had left England about 6 March. No ship of that name sailed to Philadelphia; it may have been the name of a ticket agent.[47]

The Haverford, March 1904

Only one ship from Liverpool reached Philadelphia that week: the American Line's Haverford, which sailed on 2 March and docked on 14 March 1904. Its passenger list has no one named Zaslow, but it does have three brothers named Saslawer: Itzik, 29, married, a painter; Berl, 22, single, a painter; and David, 19, single, a tailor. Their last residence was London, where they had spent three months; before that, a place that probably reads Obodiwka. They had paid their own passage and were going to a friend, S. Weisberg, at 391 Amsterdam Avenue in New York.[48]

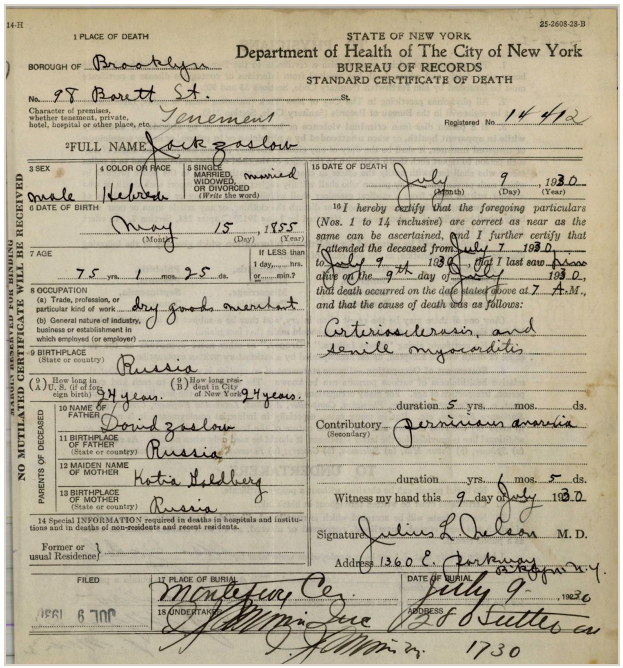

The brothers' family has probably been found in Brooklyn. On 6 August 1906 Jankel and Marjem Soslawer, 54 and 52, with Ruchle, 17, landed at Ellis Island from Liverpool on the Umbria, from "Podol." Their passage had been paid by their son, and they were going to him, care of H. Lesnoff, at 207 Hopkins Street, Brooklyn. In the 1910 census the same couple, now Jacob and Mary Zaslawer, were living on Chester Street, Brooklyn, with two sons who had come in 1904: Benjamin, 26, single, a pants-factory operator, and Hyman, 24.[49]

> The case that Benjamin Zaslow was "Berl Saslawer" (probable, about 80–85%)
> - For: His gravestone gives his Hebrew name as Dov Ber, the name behind the Yiddish Berl.
> - For: His death certificate names his parents as Jacob and Miriam, the names of the Brooklyn couple.
> - For: The Brooklyn household had a son Benjamin, born about 1884, single, who came in 1904. Benjamin Zaslow married in Philadelphia in 1910, after the census, and the Philadelphia directories of 1899–1910 have no Benjamin Zaslow before then.

- For: Obodovka links them: Benjamin's brother Herman (Hyman) gave his birthplace as "Obodonka" on his 1942 draft card, and the brothers' 1904 list probably reads Obodiwka.
- For: The Haverford is the only Liverpool ship that fits Benjamin's sworn date.
- Against: Berl's age, 22, implies a birth about 1882, not 1885; the brothers were bound for New York, not Philadelphia; Benjamin remembered 6 March, not 2 March; and no single document yet joins the Brooklyn Benjamin to the Philadelphia one.
- Against: His gravestone names his father as Yochanan, not Yaakov (Jacob); a possible explanation is given below. The 1910 marriage licence, which names the groom's parents, should settle the question.

Jacob and Miriam in Brooklyn

Benjamin's father, Jacob Zaslow, known in America as Jack, was born on 15 May 1855 and died on 9 July 1930 at 98 Barrett Street, Brooklyn, a dry goods merchant who had been in the United States 24 years, which fits his 1906 arrival. His death certificate takes the family back another generation: his parents were David Zaslow and Katia Goldberg.[50]

Jack Zaslow's death certificate, Brooklyn, 9 July 1930. Born 15 May 1855 in Russia; dry goods merchant; 24 years in the United States; father David Zaslow, mother Katia Goldberg; buried at Montefiore. NYC Municipal Archives, D-K-1930-0014412.

Benjamin's mother, Miriam (Marjem, Mary) née Lesnoff, daughter of Herman and Rose Lesnoff, died in Brooklyn on 14 September 1931 after a fall. Jack and Miriam are buried side by side at Montefiore Cemetery, in graves 25 and 26 of the plot of the Adath Israel society of Brownsville and East New York. The "H. Lesnoff" the parents went to in 1906 was probably Harry Lesnoff, a painter who came in 1904 and lived near them in 1910, perhaps Miriam's brother or nephew.[51]

Of the brothers, Itzik became Ike Zaslow, a presser of cloaks in Brooklyn; his death certificate in 1940 names his parents as Jacob Zaslow and Miriam Lesnov, and he is buried at Montefiore in the plot of the Bershider society, from Bershad, about 20 km from Obodovka, which he had helped to found in 1922. Herman (Hyman), born on 15 September 1886, died in New York in 1958. David Saslawer has not been identified.[52]

Obodovka's own surviving Jewish records have now been read: the births of 1845, 1851 and 1852, the marriages and the community's voter list of 1918, the farming applications of 1927–28, and the town's list in the census of 1875. None has a Zaslav or a Lesnoff. So in 1875 Jacob, then about 20, and his father David were not registered in Obodovka. They may have lived there while registered elsewhere, as Benjamin Saslow's family was in Tulchin, or have come after 1875; Itzik was born in 1876 and Benjamin in 1885, both, by their own accounts, in Obodovka.[53]

Jack or Yochanan? Benjamin's gravestone in Philadelphia calls him "Dov Ber son of R. Yochanan." His father was Jankel on the 1906 list, which can only be Yaakov (Jacob), but in America he was known as Jack, which is also the familiar form of John, in Hebrew Yochanan. Benjamin died in 1940, when Doris was thirteen; whoever ordered his stone may have turned "Jack" back into Hebrew as Yochanan. This is an inference.

Benjamin and Catherine in Philadelphia

In 1910 Benjamin married Catherine (Katie) Saslow, then a hosiery worker of about 19, living with her parents on South Fifth Street. The Philadelphia licence, number 260214, was issued to "Beny Zaslof" and "Katie Saslow"; Katie was still single on census day, 15 April 1910, so they married later that year.[54] Benjamin became a grocer, and by 1921 the family lived at 2163 East Cambria Street, where he kept a fruit store. He was naturalized on 10 March 1924; the witness to his petition was "B. Saslow," paperhanger, of 2208 South Fifth Street: his father-in-law.[47]

They had four children: Sylvia, born on 22 December 1911; Edward, born on 30 December 1918; Mildred, born in December 1923, who died aged two months on 16 February 1924 at her grandparents' house on South Fifth Street; and Doris, born on 24 May 1926.[55]

Catherine died on 5 September 1937, aged 46, and was buried at Har Jehuda beside her father; her Hebrew name on her stone is Beila daughter of Dov. Benjamin died of lung cancer at the Jewish Hospital on 29 February 1940 and was buried at Har Jehuda on 3 March. His stone, in Hebrew, reads Dov Ber son of R. Yochanan, died 20 Adar I 5700. Doris was eleven when her mother died and thirteen when her father died.[56]

Part six

Theodore and Doris

Theodore Rodilitz and Doris Zaslow took out their marriage licence in Brooklyn on 7 September 1948, licence number 18800. He was 29, in radio production, still living with his parents at 537 Georgia Avenue; she was a secretary living in Brooklyn Heights. The licence gives Doris's birth as 24 May 1927 in Philadelphia.[57] He came from a family that had left the Kobrin district between 1907 and 1913; she was a Philadelphian whose grandparents had come from Podolia in 1892–93 and 1906. Doris had roots in Brooklyn too: her Zaslow grandparents had lived in Brownsville and East New York, close to the Rodilitzes' streets, until their deaths in 1930 and 1931. How she and Theodore met is not known.

Affidavit for licence to marry, Brooklyn, 7 September 1948 (upper part). It names Theodore's parents as Morris Rodilitz and Sylvia Hausman and Doris's as Benjamin Zaslow and Catherine, all born in Russia. NYC Municipal Archives, L-K-1948-0018800.

By 1968 Theodore was registered to vote in Orange County, California, and he and Doris made their home in Anaheim. Theodore died on 11 January 2004, aged 84, and Doris on 25 February 2007.[58]

Their daughter Sylvia married Victor E. Koik . Through that marriage the Rodilitzes and Zaslows of Kobrin and Podolia joined the Koik family, whose own history, from Estonia, is told in The Leoke and Koik Families.

Appendix B

Those who stayed behind, 1914–1945

Every one of these families left Europe between 1892 and 1925. Relatives who stayed lived through the First World War, the redrawing of borders, and the Holocaust. No individual relative has yet been traced: searches of Yad Vashem's database of Holocaust victims under about 28 spellings of Rodilitz, and under Zaslavsky, Saslow and Hausman in the home towns, found no one who can be linked to the family. The Lesnoff name, found after those searches, has not yet been checked. Memorial books do list Prozansky families killed in Antopol, Khomsk and Kamen-Kashirsky, all within about 50 km of Divin, but none is known to be Mary's.[59]

The First World War. In August 1915 the retreating Russian army abandoned Kovel and Brest-Litovsk and ordered the Jews of the front zone east; Brest's Jews were expelled on 1 August 1915. The peace between Germany and Soviet Russia was signed at Brest-Litovsk on 3 March 1918.

Between the wars. Brest, Kobrin, Divin, Kovel and Maciejów became part of Poland in 1919–21, after fighting around Kobrin and Kovel in September 1920. Tulchin and Obodovka stayed in Soviet Ukraine. In 1919, during the civil war, pogroms killed about 170 Jews in Tulchin and between 150 and 300 in Obodovka.

The Holocaust in the Kobrin district. Germany invaded on 22 June 1941 and reached Kobrin the next day. About 8,000 Jews were confined in two ghettos. One was destroyed in the summer of 1942, when about 1,800 people were shot at Bronnaya Gora; the other on 14–15 October 1942, when about 4,000–4,500 were shot beside the Kobrin–Divin road. About 6,900 Kobrin Jews were murdered. Divin's Jews were confined in a ghetto and killed in 1942, and Czerniany's hundred or so Jews were shot in the spring or summer of that year.

Brest. Brest had about 21,500 Jews in 1936. About 5,000 men were shot in the summer of 1941. The ghetto, set up in December 1941 with about 18,000 people, was destroyed on 15 October 1942, most of its people being killed at Bronnaya Gora. Only a handful of Jews, perhaps ten to twenty, were alive in the city when it was liberated in July 1944.

Kovel and Maciejów. Kovel's ghetto was set up in May 1942 and destroyed between June and October 1942. In Maciejów, which had about 2,600 Jews in 1941, about 1,000 were shot in the quarry in August 1941, and the ghetto was destroyed in the late summer of 1942.

Tulchin and Obodovka. Southern Podolia came under Romanian rule as part of "Transnistria." Tulchin's Jews were confined in September 1941 and about 3,000 were sent to the camp at Pechora, where most died. Obodovka received about 10,000–11,000 Jews deported from Bessarabia and Bukovina in November 1941; thousands died there of typhus and hunger. What happened to Obodovka's own few hundred Jews is not recorded separately.

The families that left between 1892 and 1925 escaped all of this. Any relatives who stayed in Kobrin, Divin or Brest would almost certainly have been killed in 1942.[60]

Appendix D

Family and record details

Rodilitz

Jacob Rodilitz (Jankel Rodeletz; Hebrew Yaakov), son of Yonah, born 15 March 1871 at Kovel; Hebrew teacher; arrived 1907; naturalized 1929 (certificate 2898975); died 14–15 June 1950; buried Montefiore. Mary (Miriam Reizel, Rose), née Prozansky (Pruzansky, Porojinsky), born 25 December 1869, daughter of Abraham and Ida; arrived 1913; died 14 April 1934; buried Montefiore. Her brother Moishe Velvel Prozansky (Morris William Rosen), born 1892, arrived 1909, died in Los Angeles about 1982.

Their children: Morris (Motel), 1890–1957, married Sylvia Hausman (1915). Harry (Hersch; Hebrew Tzvi Hersh), 1892–1967, married Fannie Bunder (1919); their sons Abraham Jonas (1920–1998) and Stanley (1927–1936), who is buried at Montefiore, like his grandmother. Meyer (Meier), 1894–1950, a plumber, married Henrietta Frankel (1932). Benny (Berl, Benjamin), 1896. Ida (Chaje), 1898, married Irving Hovelin (1927). Esther, 1900 or 1903, married Sol Feinberg (1927). Louis (Leib), 1905–1970, married Gertrude Kaplan (1934). Sarah (Sure), 1907, married Martin Gordon (1929), himself born in Kobrin.

Hausman

Joseph Hausman, died before 1925. Rose (Reise), née Shapiro, born about 1865, probably at Brest-Litovsk; daughter of William Sapir(?) and Hannah Katz; arrived from Havana 1925; died in the Bronx 15 November 1932. Their daughters: Sylvia (Sivia), about 1892–1952, married Morris Rodilitz; Fega, in Havana in 1925; and a married daughter, G. Weisberg, of the Bronx.

Saslow

Duvid (David) Zaslaver (Zaslava), son of Berko, born about 1829, a townsman of Soroki and colonist of Dombroveny, living at Tulchin; married 14 January 1847 Khasya Dvoyra Nemirovskaya, daughter of Duvid, born about 1830. Children: Khaya Sima, born 1859; Ber (Benjamin Saslow), 1863; Bluma, about 1866, who married Itsko Vaisman (Weissman) in 1888; Tsipa, 1869; Avrum, 1871–1880.

Benjamin (Dov) Saslow (Ber Zaslaver), son of David, born 20 March 1863 in Tulchin (he later gave June 1865); paperhanger; arrived 1892; naturalized 1902; died 19 July 1937. Bessie (Basche, Batya), née Weiss, born March 1867, daughter of Harry (Aharon) Weiss and Molly Gold; arrived 1893; died 8 May 1936. Children: Beckie (Jety), 1889–1914, married David Mitchell; Catherine (Beile, Katie), 1891–1937, married Benjamin Zaslow; Louis, 1893 or 1895–1965; Herman, 1896; Mollie, 1899. Six children were born by 1900, five of them living; the one who died was probably Aron, born and died in Tulchin in 1887.

Zaslow

Jacob (Jankel, Jack) Zaslow (Zaslawer, Soslawer), son of David Zaslow and Katia Goldberg, born 15 May 1855; arrived 1906; dry goods merchant (probably the "Reverend" Jacob of the 1920 census, at 220 Livonia Avenue); died 9 July 1930. Miriam (Marjem, Mary), née Lesnoff, daughter of Herman and Rose Lesnoff, born 1848 or about 1854; died 14 September 1931. Nine children, seven living in 1910, among them: Itzik (Ike), 1876–1940; Benjamin (Dov Ber, probably Berl), 1885–1940, married Catherine Saslow; Herman (Hyman), 1886–1958; Ruchle, about 1889; and probably David, the third brother of 1904 (unidentified).

Benjamin and Catherine's children: Sylvia, 1911; Edward, 1918; Mildred, 1923–1924; Doris, 1926–2007, married Theodore Rodilitz.

Open questions and further research

The most useful records still to get

- The 1910 Philadelphia marriage licence of Benjamin Zaslow and Katie Saslow (no. 260214), held by the Philadelphia Register of Wills. It names both sets of parents and should confirm that Benjamin was the son of Jacob and Miriam Zaslawer of Brooklyn.
- Moishe Velvel Prozansky's veteran's file. The Department of Veterans Affairs sends a free summary of a dead veteran's file, including his parents' names; his would name Mary's parents. A request is drafted.
- Jacob Rodilitz's 1950 death certificate, which should give his mother's name.
- Photographs of Jack and Ike Zaslow's gravestones at Montefiore, to settle whether Jack's Hebrew name was Yaakov or Yochanan.
- The Har Jehuda burial registers at Temple University, for the Saslow and Zaslow burials of 1936–1940.
- Rose Hausman's immigration file, which may explain how she entered from Cuba in 1925 and name her husband's place and date of death.
- Where Beckie and Catherine were born, in 1889 and 1891: not in Tulchin's registers, so perhaps at Dombroveny or Soroki.
- Soroki's Jewish family lists (revision lists) of the 1850s, in the National Archives of Moldova, which would show the Zaslaver household and Berko's generation.

Questions

- Who was B. Rozankrans, Jacob's brother-in-law at 70 Orchard Street in 1907, who paid his passage? Possibly a relative of Mary's Prozansky family; an Abraham Pruzensky, born about 1867, was living in Harlem in 1905 (an unverified lead).
- Where was the Rodilitz home before 1907: Maciejów, Czerniany, Kobrin, Divin, or several of these in turn?
- When and how did Sylvia Hausman come to America in about 1910?
- Who was David Saslawer, the youngest of the three brothers on the Haverford, and who was "S. Weisberg" of Amsterdam Avenue?

- Were the two Davids related? Jacob Zaslow, born in 1855, was also a “Zaslawer” and the son of a David, and his sons used the same surname as Benjamin Saslow’s family. If the two families were related, Doris’s parents were cousins. They were not brothers: Jacob’s mother was Katia Goldberg, Benjamin Saslow’s was Khasya Nemirovskaya. A more distant link, through Berko Zaslaver’s other sons, is not ruled out.
- Who raised Doris after her father’s death in 1940, when she was thirteen?
- The European records. JewishGen has no Rodilitz or Prozansky records for Kobrin, Divin or Kovel: those registers are not yet indexed. The originals are in Belarus and Ukraine; letters are drafted. Kovel’s 1858 list of its Jewish townspeople, merchants and craftsmen has no Rodilitz family, so in 1858 the family was registered somewhere else.
